

Accommodation and Compliance Series

Medical Inquiry in Response to an Accommodation Request

Job Accommodation Network
PO Box 6080
Morgantown, WV 26506-6080
(800)526-7234 (V)
(877)781-9403 (TTY)
jan@jan.wvu.edu
www.jan.wvu.edu

A service of the U.S. Department of Labor's Office of Disability Employment Policy

Preface

The Job Accommodation Network (JAN) is a service of the Office of Disability Employment Policy of the U.S. Department of Labor. JAN makes documents available with the understanding that the information be used solely for educational purposes. The information is not intended to be legal or medical advice. If legal or medical advice is needed, appropriate legal or medical services should be contacted.

JAN does not endorse or recommend any products or services mentioned in this publication. Although every effort is made to update resources, JAN encourages contacting product manufacturers/vendors and service providers directly to ensure that they meet the intended purposes. This guarantees that the most up-to-date information is obtained.

The following document is not copyrighted and reproduction is encouraged. Section 105 of the Copyright Law provides that no copyright protection is available for works created by the U.S. Government. Therefore, all works created by JAN fall under this provision. While individuals may use such work with impunity, individuals may not claim copyright in the original government work, only in the original material added. Individuals may access the full text of the law from the U.S. Copyright Office <http://www.loc.gov/copyright>. Please note that specific information cited by JAN may be copyrighted from other sources. Citing secondary sources from a JAN publication may violate another organization's or individual's copyright. Permission must be obtained from these sources on a case-by-case basis. When using JAN materials, JAN asks that the materials not be reproduced for profit, that the tone and substance of the information are not altered, and that proper credit is given to JAN as the source of the information. For further information regarding this or any other document provided by JAN, please contact JAN.

Authored by Linda Carter Batiste, J.D. Updated 11/17/09.

JAN'S ACCOMMODATION AND COMPLIANCE SERIES

Introduction

JAN's Accommodation and Compliance Series is designed to help employers determine effective accommodations and comply with title I of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). Each publication in the series addresses a specific medical condition or topic and provides information about the condition or topic, ADA information, accommodation ideas, and resources for additional information.

The Accommodation and Compliance Series is a starting point in the accommodation process and may not address every situation. Accommodations should be made on a case by case basis, considering each employee's individual limitations and accommodation needs. Employers are encouraged to contact JAN to discuss specific situations in more detail.

For information on assistive technology and other accommodation ideas, visit JAN's Searchable Online Accommodation Resource (SOAR) at <http://www.jan.wvu.edu/soar>.

MEDICAL INQUIRY IN RESPONSE TO AN ACCOMMODATION REQUEST

Title I of the ADA limits an employer's ability to make disability-related inquiries or to require medical examinations at three stages of employment: pre-job offer, post-job offer, and during employment. This publication provides information regarding the limitations on medical inquiries and examinations during employment, specifically when an employee requests a reasonable accommodation.

Disability-related inquiries and examinations of employees must be "job-related and consistent with business necessity." According to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), the federal agency charged with enforcing the ADA, a medical inquiry or examination is job-related and consistent with business necessity when:

- an employer has a reasonable belief, based on objective evidence, that an employee's ability to perform essential job functions will be impaired by a medical condition, or
- an employer has a reasonable belief, based on objective evidence, that an employee will pose a direct threat due to a medical condition, or
- an employee asks for a reasonable accommodation and the employee's disability or need for accommodation is not known or obvious, or
- required in positions that affect public safety, such as police and fire fighters.

For additional information, visit: Enforcement Guidance: Disability-Related Inquiries and Medical Examinations of Employees under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) <http://www.eeoc.gov/policy/docs/guidance-inquiries.html>.

Although the ADA limits the scope of medical inquiries, it does not include forms for requesting medical information. The following pages discuss the scope of medical inquiry allowed in response to an accommodation request and provide a sample medical inquiry form that can be used when an employee requests a reasonable accommodation.

Please note that the information contained in this publication is to be used as a guide only and is not legal advice. If legal advice is needed, contact a legal service. Much of the information contained in this publication is from guidance provided by the EEOC available at <http://www.eeoc.gov>.

SCOPE OF MEDICAL INQUIRY IN RESPONSE TO AN ACCOMMODATION REQUEST

When an employee requests an accommodation and the disability or need for accommodation is not obvious, an employer may require that the employee provide medical documentation to establish that the employee has an ADA disability and needs the requested accommodation.

A. Determining whether an employee has a disability.

1. What is the definition of disability?

Under the ADA, a person has a disability if he/she 1) has a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more major life activities, 2) has a record of such an impairment, or 3) is regarded as having such an impairment. Only people in the first or second categories are entitled to reasonable accommodation.

Note: In September 2008, the ADA's definition of disability was amended. One of the changes was making the substantially limited standard an easier one to meet. Congress wanted to place less emphasis on the definition of disability and more emphasis on whether discrimination occurred. The EEOC is writing regulations to provide more guidance on the substantially limited standard and this publication will be updated as soon as those regulations are final. For more information regarding the amendments to the ADA, see <http://www.jan.wvu.edu/bulletins/adaaa1.htm>.

2. Can employers request medical documentation?

To determine whether a particular employee has a disability, an employer may request medical documentation that shows whether the employee has an impairment and whether that impairment substantially limits one or more major life activities.

An employer may require that the documentation about the disability and limitations come from an appropriate health care or rehabilitation professional. Appropriate professionals include, but are not limited to, doctors (including psychiatrists), psychologists, nurses, physical therapists, occupational therapists, speech therapists, vocational rehabilitation specialists, and licensed mental health professionals.

3. What is an impairment?

The first step in determining whether an employee has a disability is to determine whether the employee has a physical or mental impairment. A physical impairment means any physiological disorder, or condition, cosmetic disfigurement, or anatomical loss affecting one or more of the following body systems: neurological, musculoskeletal, special sense organs, respiratory (including speech organs), cardiovascular, reproductive, digestive, genito-urinary, hemic and lymphatic, skin, and endocrine. A mental or psychological disorder includes conditions such as mental retardation, organic brain syndrome, emotional or mental illness, and specific learning disabilities.

4. What is a major life activity?

Major life activities include functions such as caring for oneself, performing manual tasks, seeing, hearing, eating, sleeping, walking, standing, lifting, bending, speaking, breathing, learning, reading, concentrating, thinking, communicating, and working. Major life activities also include major bodily functions such as functions of the immune system, normal cell growth, digestive, bowel, bladder, neurological, brain, respiratory, circulatory, endocrine, and reproductive functions. These lists are not exhaustive lists; they are representative of the types of activities that are major life activities.

5. How does an employer determine whether an impairment substantially limits a major life activity?

If the employee has an impairment, the next step is to determine whether that impairment substantially limits the employee in one or more major life activities. When examining whether an impairment substantially limits a major life activity:

- Compare the employee to most people in the general population.
- Remember that the impairment need not prevent, or significantly or severely restrict, the employee from performing a major life activity.
- Consider the limitations as if the condition is in an active state.
- Ignore the ameliorative effects of mitigating measures.

6. What are mitigating measures?

Mitigating measures include things such as medication, medical supplies, equipment, hearing aids, mobility devices, the use of assistive technology, reasonable accommodations or auxiliary aids or services, prosthetics, and learned behavioral or adaptive neurological modifications. Mitigating measures do not include ordinary eyeglasses or contact lenses.

B. Determining whether an accommodation is needed.

Under the ADA, an employee is entitled to an accommodation only when the accommodation is needed because of the employee's disability; employers are not obligated to provide accommodations that an employee requests for some other reason. Therefore, an employer can ask for medical documentation to show that the requested accommodation is needed because of the employee's disability.

Keep in mind, the limitations that need accommodating do not have to be the same ones that established disability. Once it is determined that an employee has a disability, he/she is entitled to accommodations for any limitations resulting from the disability.

For more information, visit: Enforcement Guidance on Reasonable Accommodation and Undue Hardship, EEOC, at <http://www.eeoc.gov/policy/docs/accommodation.html>.

C. Determining effective accommodation options.

If an employee has a disability and needs an accommodation because of the disability, the employer must provide a reasonable accommodation, unless the accommodation poses an undue hardship. In general, an accommodation is any modification or adjustment in the work environment or in the way things are customarily done that enables an employee with a disability to enjoy equal employment opportunities. A modification or adjustment is "reasonable" if it seems reasonable on its face, meaning feasible or plausible. In addition to being reasonable, an accommodation also must be "effective" in meeting the needs of the individual. An accommodation is effective when it enables the employee to perform the essential functions of the job or to enjoy equal access to the benefits and privileges of employment that employees without disabilities enjoy.

In many cases, a reasonable accommodation will be obvious and can be made without difficulty and at little or no cost. Frequently, the individual with a disability can suggest a simple change or adjustment based on his or her life or work experience. An employer should always consult the person with the disability as the first step in considering an accommodation. In many cases the employee will be able to provide accommodation ideas. However, when an employee does not know what accommodations are appropriate, the employee's doctor may be able to provide useful accommodation suggestions.

For more information regarding the accommodation process, visit: Job Accommodation Process at <http://www.jan.wvu.edu/media/JobAccommodationProcess.html>.

In addition, employers can contact JAN for information about any accommodation issue, regardless of whether an employee meets the ADA's definition of disability.

SAMPLE MEDICAL INQUIRY FORM IN RESPONSE TO AN ACCOMMODATION REQUEST

A. Questions to help determine whether an employee has a disability.

For reasonable accommodation under the ADA, an employee has a disability if he or she has an impairment that substantially limits one or more major life activities or a record of such an impairment. The following questions may help determine whether an employee has a disability:

Does the employee have a physical or mental impairment?

Yes

No

If yes, what is the impairment?

Is the impairment long-term or permanent?

Yes

No

If not permanent, how long will the impairment likely last?

Answer the following questions based on what limitations the employee has when his or her condition is in an active state and what limitations the employee would have if no mitigating measures were used. Mitigating measures include things such as medication, medical supplies, equipment, hearing aids, mobility devices, the use of assistive technology, reasonable accommodations or auxiliary aids or services, prosthetics, and learned behavioral or adaptive neurological modifications. Mitigating measures do not include ordinary eyeglasses or contact lenses.

Does the impairment substantially limit a major life activity?

Note: Does not need to significantly or severely restrict to meet this standard.

Yes

No

If yes, what major life activity(s) is/are affected?

Caring For Self

Walking

Hearing

Lifting

Other:

Interacting With Others

Standing

Seeing

Sleeping

(describe)

Performing Manual Tasks

Reaching

Speaking

Concentrating

Breathing

Thinking

Learning

Reproduction

Working

Toileting

Sitting

Does the impairment substantially limit the operation of a major bodily function?

Note: Does not need to significantly or severely restrict to meet this standard.

Yes

No

If yes, what bodily function is affected?

Immune

Hemic

Circulatory

Other: (describe)

Normal Cell Growth

Special Sense Organs and Skin

Endocrine

Digestive

Lymphatic

Reproductive

Bowel

Neurological

Musculoskeletal

Bladder

Brain

Special Sense

Genitourinary

Respiratory

Cardiovascular

B. Questions to help determine whether an accommodation is needed.

An employee with a disability is entitled to an accommodation only when the accommodation is needed because of the disability. The following questions may help determine whether the requested accommodation is needed because of the disability:

What limitation(s) is interfering with job performance?

What job function(s) is the employee having trouble performing because of the limitation(s)?

How does the employee's limitation(s) interfere with his/her ability to perform the job function(s)?

C. Questions to help determine effective accommodation options.

If an employee has a disability and needs an accommodation because of the disability, the employer must provide a reasonable accommodation, unless the accommodation poses an undue hardship. The following questions may help determine effective accommodations:

Do you have any suggestions regarding possible accommodations to improve job performance?

If so, what are they?

How would your suggestions improve the employee's job performance?

D. Comments.

Medical Professional's Signature

Date

This document was developed by the Job Accommodation Network, funded by a contract agreement from the U.S. Department of Labor, Office of Disability Employment Policy (DOL079RP20426). The opinions expressed herein do not necessarily reflect the position or policy of the U.S. Department of Labor. Nor does mention of trade names, commercial products, or organizations imply endorsement by the U.S. Department of Labor.

